BIOGRAPHIES

Resonant Metal

Resonant Metal is Southern California based percussion ensemble comprised of Tim Laguna, Taylor Brown, Danilo Virata, and Kevin Bellefeuille. The group focuses on percussion chamber music standards as well as playing new music by local composers. Taking inspiration from groups like NEXUS, Third Coast Percussion, and Sandbox Percussion, Resonant Metal's aim is to bring contemporary percussion music into the foreground to be appreciated by a wider audience. Resonant Metal achieves this by creating visual content showcasing performances and content in the form of masterclasses surrounding performance pieces.

Each member has a background in education, varying from teaching middle and high school students, coaching drum corps, indoor percussion, honor groups, and private instruction. This background guides the Resonant Metal in their future to create dialogue among percussionist and to further support music education beyond the classroom.

Spark Percussion

Spark Percussion is a professional percussion ensemble in residence at Cal State San Bernardino. Drawing members from CSUSB's faculty, alumni, and current students, the group vigorously explores repertoire of ever-growing complexity and ever-varying genres. True to its name, Spark Percussion actively pursues the creation of new music by encouraging compositions from promising new composers, including its own members. The ensemble also seeks to generate interest in percussion music and support percussion education through interaction with students of all ages and with the larger community.

The group has performed for a wide variety of events and venues. In addition to recurring performances on CSUSB's San Bernardino and Palm Desert campuses, Spark has performed for the Southern California Day of Percussion, the Redlands Bowl, the San Bernardino City Arts Festival, and at the Richard Nixon Presidential Library and Disney Hall.
